Extreme weather worldwide as climate crisis bears down

By David Pierson,
Alice Su
and Molly Hennessy-Fiske
Los Angeles Times

BEIJING — Torrents of murky brown water gushed past the train window, flowing fast through the subway tunnel. Inside, passengers stood on top of seats, clutching their phones overhead as the muddy tide rose past their chests. Some gasped for air. Others sent desperate last messages to family members, telling them their bank card passcodes and saying goodbye.

"The water outside has already come this high," one frightened woman said, reaching out to the subway car door in a video that spread quickly online. "My phone is almost dead. I don't know if this is my last WeChat message."

The woman, one of some 500 people trapped on a subway amid catastrophic flooding Tuesday night in Zhengzhou, in China's Henan province, reportedly survived. A dozen people did not.

The scenes of desperation and devastation in Zhengzhou added to a portfolio of disasters this year that have raised the specter of irreversible climate change as never before and offered glimpses of what it means to live on a warming planet where human survival grows more fraught.

Extreme weather this summer has flattened picturesque rural communities in Germany with floodwaters, triggered deadly mudslides in India and sparked heat waves and fires that can be seen from space in the western United States and Canada. Floods have also wrought damage in parts of New Zealand, Nigeria and Iran.

Scientists have been warning for years that rising temperatures will make dry conditions for wildfires more common in some parts of the world and, in other places, trap more moisture in the atmosphere, leading to heavier rainfalls during storms.

That could cause more volatile events like the downpour over London on July 12, when about a month's worth of rain fell on parts of the British capital, leading to flash floods that paralyzed some streets and forced the partial closure of its famed Underground rail system.

It could also inflict more unprecedented heat waves like those experienced this month in the Pacific Northwest, where hundreds of people are believed to have died from the extreme temperatures, and Russia's Siberia, where nearly 200 separate forest fires have choked the region in smoke that has since drifted to Alaska.

"All of this was predicted in climate science decades ago," said John P. Holdren, a professor of environmental policy at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government. "We only had to wait for the actual emergence in the last 15 to 20 years. Everything we worried about is happening, and it's all happening at the high end of projections, even faster than the previous most pessimistic estimates."

Scientists and environmental activists are in a race to persuade the world to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by enough to prevent global temperatures from rising more than 1.5 degrees Celsius above preindustrial levels. Failure to do so could result in massive disruptions such as famine and widespread coastal flooding. Time is short: Global temperatures have already risen on average by 1.2 degrees Celsius since 1880.

Chef Peter Duenas earns spot in Great American Seafood Cook-Off

Louisiana Lt. Gov. Billy Nungesser and the Louisiana Seafood Promotion and Marketing Board announced Monday that Chef Peter Duenas of Guam will face off against 12 other chefs from around the country in the nation's ultimate seafood cooking competition.

The 2021 Great American Seafood Cook-Off will be held at the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center in New Orleans on Saturday, Aug. 7.

Duenas, from Meskla Chamoru Fusion Bistro in Hagåtña, took home third place at the 2019 Great American Seafood Cook-Off with his prawn hash-topped Napoleon wrasse.

The 17th annual event will get underway with opening ceremonies at 11:30 a.m. as 13 chefs, each representing their home state or territory, cook in front of a live audience and a panel of nationally acclaimed judges, the organizers announced in a press release.

"Following a challenging year for all of us, the Great American Seafood Cook-Off is the perfect stage to celebrate Louisiana and America's domestic seafood industry - the best in the world," said Nungesser. "This year we are excited to welcome a very talented field of chefs from all over the country vying to be crowned the next 'King or Queen of American Seafood' right here in New Orleans. Each chef will be showcasing their skills with domestic seafood to present the best seafood dishes."

The 2021 Great American Seafood Cook-Off competitor chefs are:

- Nicholas Huckabee, A Difference in Dining; Myrtle Beach, South Carolina; and
- Jesse Cavazos, Nick's Fish Dive + Oyster Bar; The Woodlands, Houston, Texas.

During the competition, each chef will prepare a dish highlighting the use of domestic seafood while interacting with the live audience, celebrity hosts Chef Cory Bahr, a Food Network Star finalist, a Food Network "Chopped!" champion, and a former King of Louisiana Seafood.

Each dish will be presented to a panel of nationally renowned judges who will score based on presentation, creativity, composition, craftsmanship and flavor. The Great American Seafood Cook-Off promotes the quality and variety of domestic seafood found in the United States, according to the press release.

To be eligible to compete in the event, chefs must either hold the current title of King or Queen of Seafood or be appointed by the lieutenant governor of their respective state or territory. The reigning King of American Seafood, Louisiana's Chef Nathan Richard of Cuvée Wine Bar & Bistro, won the title with his dish of "Cracklin-cruste'd" Red Snapper with pickled crawfish tails, buttermilk chili consommé, spring vegetables, burnt leek oil, fermented cream, and bowfin caviar, knocking out 11 of the nation's best chefs, according to the press release.
